John Locke tells that men formed the lawful society in order to secure his Property. This common cause of securing property, handed the power of that society to Monarch. He says that laws in that society must be regulated by independent judiciary. However, the king cannot abrogate those laws. He also raised his voice against State's interference in trade. He says that man ~~can~~ can neither be deprived from his property ~~forcefully~~ nor can taxed forcefully. This is known as the doctrine of "No taxation without representation" in modern times.
