← → Dual Nature of Disorder

Manto was a victim of social syndrome due to which his critics branded him vulgar and morally questioning his written work. In spite of changed his immoral behaviour he had firm commitment to offend the self style purists. According to Freud, he sought not only to loose restriction on sexual activities verbally, but tangibly for those who do it as business. In the view of Manto, man is human being but he was concerned for the socio-moral issues; dual nature of man in society at different stages. Like Lawrence, Joyce, Caldwell and Manto consider vulgarity good, that people adjust their activities well.
