Title: Providing Freedom in Education to different Scenario

Psychological theory defines freedom in education in different perspectives. Instead of others, providing liberty for children in education can increase better opportunities. However, the philosopher, Rousseau, beliefs that freedom would only provide moral value but not enhance the growth of children. Some experts say that besides education, the nurture of children is possible. However, it is unbelievable, without education, the individual growth is impossible. Therefore, education is a necessary tool to bring awareness among our societies' masses which and to help to reduce overpopulation. Moreover, the educated people can spread freedom in education through their own valuable success and maintain merit in their societies. Therefore, education should be provided for needy children with freedom.
