

Title: Development is Not Possible Without Rural Development.

The rural development is important for any developmental planning and with the contribution of the people in it, the production can be improved. More than 70 percent of the people live in rural areas but their income is 34 percent less than that of urban areas. Employment and poverty related issues are unhealed in rural areas. The able and well-off people moved to cities for better future and caused urban sprawl. Agriculture has developed in rural areas but water, electricity, education and health are necessary for positive change. These facilities are required for societal development and for the preservation of the culture.

Word count: 109/300