

Political instability has been a major issue for Pakistan since its inception. When Pakistan came on the map of the world, soon its founder died. Number of prime ministers changed in a very short time. Then three military's martial laws ruined the democratic culture.

Partition in 1971 was also the result of political instability.

Politicians are just fighting with each other instead of improving democratic norms. Political instability has resulted in high inflation, unemployment, brain drain, economic crises and many other issues. The risk of default is looming over Pakistan's head.

So, there must be a political will in the leaders to work together for the democracy in the country.
