

Q Write a Paragraph of 200 words

i. Democracy is the government of the people, by the people, for the people.

American President and one of influential leader in the history of United States, Abraham Lincoln described democracy as the government of the people, by the people, for the people. This definition gained prominence and is one of most famous definition of democracy. It is described so, because the real political power lies in the hands of demos (people) in this case. People elect their representatives from themselves, who govern themselves later on. The system has its roots in ancient Greece. It often remained prevalent, in different forms, in different countries, across the world. From almost a century, rapid democratization of world has been observed. It has been adopted unanimously across the western world. While in East, it is also gaining ground. This system is highly praised because of being representative of ordinary citizens; But in this age of propoganda, is democracy really serving the people or it has become a paw of small minority to control masses. Having a lot of benefits, this system is not exempted from drawbacks. In many parts, it do not serve its actual path, but it is a system of hope which is in the process of continuous evolution.
