

Procrastination kills productivity

Productivity is diminished by procrastination. Procrastination means delaying tasks and activities due to laziness. It has adverse impacts on productivity because of following reasons. It leads to loss of time. For instance, if a PMS (Provincial Management Service) Aspirant is not doing his homework on time and indulge in different unproductive tasks. Resultantly, he losses a lot of his time, and he cannot get benefit from its creative skills. Another effect of procrastination is increasing stress. When a person does not complete his assigned task on time, a wave of stress emerges from inside. Consequently, his productivity vanishes. Furthermore, efficiency is directly with the activities performed with maximum output. But a person who procrastinates cannot be efficient. As a result, productivity is wiped out. Likewise, lower esteem is the by product of procrastination. A person who has low esteem is unable to get maximum fruits from his hidden skills. Consequently, productivity declines. In a nutshell, procrastination is the killer of time, time shortage leads to psychological pressure which ultimately leads to low or no productivity.
