Social variants are discussed too long

Femininity in Pakistan. Introduction -

Femininity is also known as (women attributes or womenhood), is a set of socially constructed but also biologically-attributes, behaviors that are not only socially constructed but also biologically-constructed. Though there are some cultural variants of femininity, some of these variants are universal. ~~are universal~~ <sup>are well</sup> For example, it may be assumed that girls are shy, emotional, weak and talkative. On the other hand, men are thought to be strong, brave, rational and tough. It is openly <sup>Pakistani?</sup> defining the concept of masculinity and femininity. If we look at the our family settings, it is cleared that men <sup>ve</sup> have a dominant position while making any sort of decision. And females <sup>are</sup> are there just to accept their decision or to give any suggestion. but at the end it is male's choice to accept it or not. This practice is very common in all ~~sort of~~ societies.
