

CSS 2003

University: An Institute for Raising Moral Beings

According to the Author, the end goal of any University should be transforming the individuals so that they ^{can} fit in the society. Universities are not places which ^{that} creates heroes, leaders, warriors or poets nor they make any professionalist. Rather universities are places that cultivates an individual mind, develop their natural senses, motivate them, teach them the difference between right and wrong and enhance their mental capabilities so that they could channelize the convey their ~~opini~~ views and seek truth. These institutes help the individuals to focus on what is important and ignore what is not. However, these universities also help individuals to make the choice of field they pursued and equip them in joining the desired post they seek to join.

Total words of original piece: 326

Preci words = $\frac{326}{3} - 109$

Written Preci words = 118.