

Essay: Is Pak ready for digital revolution

Introduction

All the revolutions in the world had not come and ended without leaving behind a distinct and legitimate reason for having passed through it. Whether it be the American Revolution, French Revolution or the agricultural Revolution of Pakistan, all had some purpose. The digital revolution is also a wakeup call for a country with many legitimate reasons; whose the best among those is country's development. It means that the digital revolution is crucial for the development. Although critics stand with the idea that Pakistan is lagging behind the world in digital revolution, it is evident that Pakistan is on the way of digital revolution. The image of digital revolution is reflecting in almost every walk of life including e-learning, E-commerce and digital media also. Not only that, the country also has introduced the digital financial system. Yet the opponents believe that the idea of e-learning, E-commerce and promotion of digital media has not fully worked.

They emphasizes on promoting the information technology not increasing the media houses for the Country's development. However, there are evidences that Pakistan is heading towards the digital revolution. As Pakistan is struggling to increase the efficiency of its online platforms, information technology and the digital media.
