The background of a person is. What matters is, the progress of person in society. His effort makes a difference between the beginning and ending of his life cycle. It was February 02, 201995. A girl was born in Faisalabad, Pakistan. She was very hardworking and focused with her studies. In 2004, at the age of nine, she proved herself and become 'Youngest Microsoft Certified Professional'. With her utmost effort she also received 'Fatima Jinnah Gold medal' and 'Presidential Pride of Performance' in line. However, unfortunately, January 14, 2012 at the age of 16, she passed away due to cardiac problem. Yes, she was Arfa kareem Randhawa. a philosopher. A person might come from a society with a dark history but become a symbol of humanity. A person can prove themselves as the first black president. A person could be born weak but become the leader of a state. A person can be born in the first world and provide services to a third-world country. The thing is, what makes a person different from on the inside that sets them apart from the outside world. So, if a person has empathy for others, they become successful. If a person has a thirst for knowledge, they become different from others. If a person has been assigned a duty by God to pave the way for people. If a person has the courage to do something for their community with passion and patience. Now, the interesting question is how an individual can make such changes in themselves. They can do it by focusing on their goals, maintaining discipline in their life, having a clear reason for their goals, and not being comfortable until they achieve them.
