Title: Man's Mastery of Personal and Relationship Skills

Man wants to conquer social relations with personal skills while compromising his true self. He needs to strengthen his roots and master himself first.

Because without self independence, control, and liking he cannot build relationship skills with others. He might achieve some success in good times with his skills but will stumble again in his bad times due to lack of strong grounds. Relations are based on man's true nature instead of superficial learned techniques, others can sense trickery and man will lose his interdependence. But the skills which emerge naturally from an independent character, it makes man able to follow his own principles to build effective relationships with other people.
