Title: Emergence of Art in Greeks

Greeks had a different perception and did not recognize the original meaning of natural beauty despite the fact that their country had a plentiful of natural scenery.

Ancient people considered as an obstacle for interaction and agriculture. Furthermore, those places inhabited the enemies of mankind in the form of wild animals.

Greek people did not like forest and mountains as they created the problems for agriculture as it developed man's hatred towards nature.

Even they had the same perception about the sea as a waste land though it provided them wealth.

That is why, art was not seen in early creeks. But once their downfall started,

people started smuggling power.
So authors at different fields
agree with the importance of nature.
