

The Psychological causes of unhappiness, it is clear, are many and various. But all have something in common. The typical unhappy man is one who having been deprived in youth of some normal satisfaction, has come to value this one kind of satisfaction more than any other, and has, therefore, given to his life a one-sided direction, together with a quite undue emphasis upon the achievement as opposed to the activities connected with it. There is, however, a further development which is very common in the present day. A man may feel so completely thwarted that he seeks no form of satisfaction, but only distraction and oblivion. He then becomes a devotee of "Pleasure". That is to say, he seeks to make life bearable by becoming less alive. Drunkenness, for example, is temporary suicide; the happiness that it brings is merely negative, a momentary cessation of unhappiness. The narcissist and the megalomaniac believe that happiness is possible, though they may adopt mistaken means of achieving it; but the man who seeks intoxication, in whatever form, has given up hope except in oblivion. In his case the first thing to be done is to persuade him that happiness is desirable. Men, who are unhappy, like men who sleep badly, are always proud of the fact. Perhaps their pride is like that of the fox who had lost his tail; if so, the way to cure it is to point out to them how they can grow a new tail. Very few men, I believe, will deliberately choose unhappiness if they see a way of being happy. I do not deny that such men exist, but they are not sufficiently numerous to be important. It is common in our day, as it has been in many other periods of the world's history, to suppose that those among us who are wise have seen through all the enthusiasms of earlier times and have become aware that there is nothing left to live for. The man who hold this view are genuinely unhappy, but they are proud of their unhappiness, which they attribute to the nature of the universe and consider to be the only rational attitude for an enlightened man. Their pride in their unhappiness makes less sophisticated people suspicious of its genuineness; they think that the man who enjoys being miserable is not miserable.

The life of an unsatisfied person

Title needs improvement.

There are many causes of unhappiness. However, all the causes have something in common. After being deprived of a satisfaction in young age, an unhappy person starts valuing greatly that satisfaction. Besides, in modern days, an unsatisfied person becomes pleasure seeker. Like he drinks but this act can give pleasure to him for a while, instead of bringing happiness in a long run in his life. When it comes to the wise people of the world, after seeing all the charms of the life, they have become unhappy, but they like their unhappiness because they are of the opinion that this is the trait of an intellectual person. Nevertheless, ordinary people do not

Do not include examples in précis. Just give their gist.

this
believe in ~~their belief~~. The reason is that they think that a person who loves to be unhappy is not unhappy.

Total words: 392, required words for precis: 131 and precis words: 134

Idea and structure are ok. Decent attempt.

9
20