Title:

Emergence of Middle class in 19th Century.

According to Besant in 19th century the concept of class system was belonging to the title of birth. Middle class was not considered a class, and the only influential class don't allow others in their circle of life. The middle class created their own society with a set of mutual values. The self believe and importance give them chance to be visible and influenced with the time. They also lifted-up the lower class members of the society. The rules of a respectable society by middle class recognized universally and shaped the society accordingly.
