In order to find out our hidden faults, it is necessary to consider what our enemies say about ourselves. Mostly, our friends praise us in line with our hearts. Firstly, ^{either} our faults do not seem odd to them or they hide the faults for our sake so that not to make us sad, or they close their eyes to them. In contrast, our enemy scrutinize ourselves well and search out our faults from every nook of us. In fact, he makes a mountain out of a molehill. A friend always enhances his friend's good deeds and an enemy increases highlights the person's faults. Therefore, we should be obliged to move to our enemy that he makes us aware of our faults. From this perspective it seems that an enemy proves to be better than a friend.
