How to Deal with children?

The author believes that modern educationists overemphasize negative aspects of interfering in children's lives. Whereas they undermine benefits of actively enjoying their company. Natural liking towards children compel them to respond without any complaints. However, any effort of controlling their behaviors would prove counterproductive. Hence an affectionate teacher can easily influence children's minds. Unfortunately overworked teachers lack this innate trait because of constantly in contact with them. So teachers should be working within limited hours otherwise the exhausting company of children is likely to manifest in their behavior. The viable solution is to prevail natural likeliness towards children instead of unnecessary rules as no rule can replace love and affection.
