

Question 1

The author says that instead of making machines our servants, they have become our masters. This has come about in a sense that men are not being able to cope with the power of science anymore. They are not capable of managing the machines. Machines are masters now and men have grown so much dependent on them that they spend half of their lives in taking care of the needs of machines. According to author, instead of taking a job from machine, men have made them their inevitable masters.

Question 2

The use of machines has brought us more leisure and more energy. However, the author says that this has been a curse rather than a blessing. This situation is worse because instead of using that more energy in making other better things, we tend to do very less. What we do is that we utilize that more leisure and energy in making more and better machines. Human beings think that such endeavors will make them civilized but the reality is otherwise.

Question 3

Civilization, according to the author, is the making and connecting beautiful things. Moreover, civilisation means thinking freely, living appropriately and sustaining justice unbiasedly between human beings. I agree with the above mentioned views of the author.

Question 4

The expression, 'Making more beautiful things' means to make things more beautiful, and things other than the machines. Beautiful things are limitless in this universe, however, few to be mentioned here are, to explore the universe, to eradicate the reasons of fights between nations and to discover the strategies and policies to prevent poverty. When we will utilize our more time and more energy given by the powerful machines in better ways, we will make beautiful things happen around us.

Question 5

There are some humble plans which if properly structured and functioned, can prevent poverty in the world. These plans are making awareness among world elites to ensure equality among the global North and South by providing the underprivileged monthly, quarterly and annual funds raised by World NBIOs and concerned authorities.

Education should be the right of every member of world so that he should be aware of his rights and responsibilities. Additionally, a well-known Zatat system should be installed throughout the world as indispensable constitutional act so that there is no class division left behind. Next, children would receive my particular attention because they are blank slates and we can write whatever good to them so that by the time they are grown up, they would know their rights, laws, responsibilities and accordingly they will be active citizens to raise their voices for poor and against the cruel elites.
