

Implications of Second World War

According to George Clark, Second German war was like the first one as USA came in war after remaining neutral and both ended with German defeat. Differences can be seen in allies of war and it lasted long than the first one. Both sides dropped bomb without respecting nature, even population was also severely affected. (Population) People also escaped from country. Food supplies ran short. Labour became necessary for both genders. War spread all over the world. (There were many) Casualties were more in civilians than armed forces. It was not like trench warfare but there was almost every other sort of warfare. Both sides built gas and biological warfare but never used them. There were many scientific inventions in different fields.