

Preci - 2017

The root of all evil, according to the author, is the people actively in pursuit of aimless objectives. If being ^{busy} is so virtuous, ~~then~~ the devil should be adulated, for he wastes no time. The perplexed state of the world is not caused by lazy people but rather by ubiquitous purposeless quests. Past events in history attest to the notion that overly active kings, diplomats have, more often than not, exacerbated the issues. Even in the contemporary world, if global leaders become lazy, the most prevalent issues will be resolved. There are still some religious conferences where, despite the myriad challenges grappling the world, the members focus on trivial matters ~~to~~ that do not require such attention. So to make this world peaceful, such people should eschew conferences and take some time off to recover their health.
