

Envy and admiration: Two extremes of Human Nature

Envy is the Achilles heel in the human nature. It is not only pernicious for the envious person himself but also to the others. Instead of being grateful for what he has, an envious man becomes jealous about others achievements and possessions. If envy remained unchecked, ~~and~~ it would be disastrous for the society. However, admiration in human nature ~~makes~~ <sup>enables</sup> one to accept others accomplishments. Ultimately, it engenders happiness and lessens envy. In short, admiration and happiness go hand in hand. Although, happiness can be an antidote for envy, the latter never let a person to be jocular. So, envy can only be rehabilitated by comprehending the reasons behind envious feelings.