

Authority as a Controlling Mechanism in Education

There are three school of thoughts regarding childrens' education. One encourages complete liberty to children regardless of consequences. Other is subject to authority and third one emphasis on the notion that even in complete freedom children will be civilized and well behaved. The critique on third school of thought is that it is mere a rhetoric not a practical theory. Moreover, the huge population can not coexist peacefully without any social control. Furthermore, children can not learn all these civilized manners themselves without any external checks. The scholars only allowed freedom to those who exceptional quotient and does not respond impulsively. However, education should not merely considered as a mechanism of spontaneous development.
