

Mashaal

Demand of Democracy without democracy within party level.

The main agenda of all political parties is to work for the betterment of democracy within ^{The} country. All political parties are against the interference of undemocratic forces in political processes.

avoid personal pronouns

But when we look at the intra-party elections their democracy first agenda seems not more than a hollow talk. The re-elected Nawaz Sharif and Maryam Nawaz are re-elected as PM (N) president and vice president again in recently held party election.

In the presence of former prime-minister Shahid Khagan Abbasi and former Finance minister ^{Finance minister} Mufta Ismail such ^{an} election ^{raises} raises eyebrow on their democracy-first commitment?

The ^{is} situation of other political parties are not much different. In PPP,

Zardari ~~can~~ expressed his ~~wish~~ wish to see his son Bilawal Bhutto as next or future prime-minister. In PTI,

The core committee of Pakistan Tehreek

1) - e- insof, elected Imran Khan as the life long chairman of PTI is also a undemocratic act. Such undemocratic steps make one person or a family to control the whole party from top to bottom. Hence without promoting democracy within party level and their demand for democracy within country is absurd.

→ To adopt an unbiased tone, do not refer to politicians in their personal capacity refer to the official post/relations, e.g. the brother and daughter of party head

e.g. have been appointed as the Pres ^ vice-pres

Another dynamic party respect vdy. as expressed by its founder head, is going to be run by grand son of its founder etc.
