Emergence of Middle class in 9th Century.

According to Besant in 9th century the concept of class system was based on belonging to the title of birth. Middle class was not considered a class, and the only influential class did not allow others in their circle of life. The middle class created their own society with a set of mutual values. The self belief and importance gave them chance to be visible and increase their influence. They influenced with the time. They also lifted-up the lower class members of the society. The rules of a respectable society by middle class recognized universally and shaped the society accordingly.
