

1. Write a precis of the following passage and suggest a suitable title.

Throughout the ages of human development men have been subject to miseries of two kinds: those imposed by external nature, and, those that human beings misguidedly inflicted upon each other. At first, by far the worst evils were those that were due to the environment. Man was a rare species, whose survival was precarious. Without the agility of the monkey, without any coating of fur, he has difficulty in escaping from wild beasts, and in most parts of the world could not endure the winter's cold. He had only two biological advantages: the upright posture freed his hands, and intelligence enabled him to transmit experience. Gradually these two advantages gave him supremacy. The numbers of the human species increased beyond those of any other large mammals. But nature could still assert her power by means of flood and famine and pestilence and by exacting from the great majority of mankind incessant toil in the securing of daily bread. In our own day our bondage to external nature is fast diminishing, as a result of the growth of scientific intelligence. Famines and pestilence still occur, but we know better, year by year, what should be done to prevent them. Hard work is still necessary, but only because we are unwise: given peace and co-operation, we could subsist on a very moderate amount of toil. With existing technique, we can, whenever we choose to exercise wisdom, be free of many ancient forms of bondage to external nature. But the evils that men inflict upon each other have not diminished in the same degree. There are still wars, oppressions, and hideous cruelties, and greedy men still snatch wealth from those who are less skillful or less ruthless than themselves. Love of power still leads to vast tyrannies, or to mere obstruction when its grosser forms are impossible. And fear deep scarcely conscious fear -- is still the dominant motive in very many lives.

write simple sentence

don't break the sentence unnecessarily

Causes of Human Depravity

Since ~~ages~~ ~~man~~ mankind has been suffering two type of excesses: one by nature and other the conflicts among themselves. He attained supremacy over the wild beast through his biological trait: the upright postures and intelligent mind. Through his intelligence, men ~~learned~~ to evolve beyond any other mammals. He successfully dealt with famine, floods and pestilence. On modern times, with hard work and scientific methods, he can overcome the furies of natural disasters. However, men still have conflict with each other just for power and wealth has result in war, oppression and ruthless autocracies. For the development of congenial society, it is essential that exploitation of man by man must be end immediately.

Word Count:

Passage : 333

Precise : 115

need improvement

be precise and to the point

over all there is a lot of room for improvement

over all average content

7/20