13. Up the River Hudson in North America are the Catskill Mountains. In a certain village at the foot of these mountains, there lived long ago a man named Rip Van Winkle. He was a simple and good-natured person, a very and neighbour and a great favourite among all the good wives of the village. Whenever there was a squabble in the amily of Rip, the women in the village always took his part and laid all the blame on Dame Van Winkle.

The children of the village too would shout with joy, whenever they saw him. He helped at their sports, made Paythings for them, taught them to fly kites and shoot marbles and told them long stories of ghosts, witches and Rip had no love for labour, if it would bring him profit. He would sit for a whole day on a wet rock and fish du Indians, without a murmur, even though he did not catch a single fish. He would carry a light gun on his shoulder for hours logether and shoot only a few squirrels or wild pigeons.

t or

ich.

y a hate hy a ain-two

bus

He would never refuse to assist a neighbour even in roughest toil. The women of the village often employed Im to run their errands and to do little jobs for them. In a word, Rip was ready to attend to anybody's business but his own. He was, however, one of those men who take the world easy. He would eat coarse bread or fine, whichever ould be got with least thought or trouble. And he would rather starve on a penny than work for a pound.

If left to himself, Rip would have whistled away life in perfect contentment. But his wife always kept drumming Then to himself. Rip would have whistied away life in poncer contentinent. But his wire always kept drumming the his ears about his idleness, his carelessness and the ruins he was bringing on his family. Rip had but one way of replications about his idleness, his carelessness and the ruins he was bringing on his family. Rip had but one way of sears about his idleness, his carelessness and the full his eyes and said nothing. He had one good friend at home styling to all her lectures—he shook his head, cast up his eyes and said nothing. He had one good friend at home and her lectures—he shook his head, cast the master.

and that was his dog Wolf which was as idle as the master. men who is perpetually hesitating which of the two things he will do first, will do neither. The man make a more clear title acceptable but could be better Rip wan winkles write total words too and write in heading of word count main idea is picked but there is too much detail of the story precise exceeds word count be precise and to the point and dont repeat the same words need improvement not satisfactory 6/20