Title: Human Need for Divinity

The Fear of the unknown and realization of their ficilly against nature, compelled hymans to seek divine guidance. Southsayers, in ancient Greece, translated the wishes of God through analyzing various signs in nature along with dream interpretation and palmistry. Humans relied on this knowledge for guidance in life. Moreover, there were cases when instead of giving signs, the frods communicated directly to the Prophets which etevated their homen status for the time being. These divine messages were then conveyed to people through the Prophets, just like the Greek oracles interpreted in separately set sanctualies for different Gods aimed to do so through the art of faretelling the lature last sentence is too long be precise and to the point dont repeat the same points need improvement in expression word Count: 120 words.

Freedom in Education: Contrasting Views.

There are three different views regarding: freedom in education; complete freedom, complete authorization and freedom with a pre-requisite of being good. The third view has no logical basis but is still widely accepted. Some people believe Rousseau's perception of freedom guaranteeing moral perfection and there fore don't consider education to be of vital importance for childrent. This school of thought, however, ignores the need for collectivity in today's interannected would where counting on mutual collaboration seems like a dream. Usually people who support freedom evenlock the tock that success cannot be achieved without proper check and balance of individual's impulses. Thus, education is needed to advance science and technology and to provide multiple benefits to children.
