

Topic: "It matters not what someone is born,
but what they grow to be"

* Introduction

Date 20
M T W T F S S

Essay

Life is not defined by the circumstances a person is born in, but the efforts he makes to change his life. A person does not have control where he is born; however, he can change the course of his life. What matters in life is the realization of potential one has been bestowed by God. It is instrumental to unleash that potential and use it to change ~~the~~ ^{one's} fate. World is witness of countless instances where people born in cottages, died in palaces. They became the architect of their fate. People who were born in poverty, became one of the most influential personalities. They changed their fate as well as people around them. It is all about the efforts one makes to change the course of one's life. Obama was born in a poor family; however, he became President of the United States of America. Similarly, Abraham Lincoln was also born in a poor family, but he became one of the most influential President in the American history. People born in worst circumstances, achieved ~~achieved~~ impossible in the history. They defied all the odds in life and reached the new heights in life. Sky is the limit for human beings, they can achieve beyond their ~~potential~~ imagination. The unlimited potential is only to be unleashed. Hence, it is true that it matters not what someone is born, but what they grow to be.

It was the fine introduction

But I cannot judge whether you have added Essence of the outline. 231

or not

Word count is fine as well

- * Please check Grammatical errors
- * Is my approach to introduce the topic correct?
- * Is the word count enough?