A visit to Cherokee

According to author, they went on trip to Cherokee, suggested by his friend. They visited Qualla boundary and its Indian village which shows Cherokee's past with its ancient crafts. With the help of locals, they managed to find souvenir shop filled with ancient war weapons. George welcomed them and they were surprised by his fluent English. He invited them for lunch. While chatting with him, they feel that Cherokees do not depend only on trade while they have other means of income like bingo weekends where they attract people with different kinds of games. Their final stop was museum. After coming back, they are looking for another trip.
