Geographical effects on Human lives

Precis

In northern Europe, the positive effects of cold are clear as it excites energy by acting as a barrier. Intense cold drains energy while hot climate increases energy abt. In moderate cold climate, humans are engaged in activities for their survival such as constructing strong houses, arranging warm clothes, wood, coal, and nourishing food along with suffering from fast moving cold winds in open air. While in hot climate, life is comparatively easier than cold. This is due to less need of clothes, fire, and food. Whole day can be spent in open air easily in hot weather. The same can be observed by us during different seasons of year. In hot weather, we are lazy and take life easy, whereas in cold weather, we are physically and mentally energetic.
