Title: Private victory precedes public victory.

If one want to germish his social interaction, first he will work on himself and it's a very basic paradigm shift. If a person don't know his inner self he shall never create good relation with others. One can never be interdependent, if his thoughts/mind are not independent. The important thing in building a relation is character, not the thoughts. If a person's character is self explanatory he will make good relation because it depends on inner thoughts. When free thoughts flourish in @ minds, then making correlations with people will also be easy and productive.
