

Title:- Role of Education in overall Development of Children

There are three schools of thought on freedom in education in which ^{the} first believes in complete freedom while the second one favours authoritarian control regardless of how good or bad children may be. On the other hand, ^{the} third one favours freedom but with good nature always; a concept borrowed by Rousseau who believed that education provides environment for spontaneous development. However, it looks too individualistic and hypothetical in society of cooperation, where science and technology are subjected to the existence of large population. Therefore, education must be considered as an important component for the physical, psychological and moral development of children.
