

Date            Title: Universities, Shaping Societies

Universities must play a practical role in training people to shape the world for good. Although universities produced people who had extended remarkable services, they no longer do so. This is because universities are not limited to single subject. University education shapes social fabric by molding individual minds of a nation according to prevalent ~~stands~~ trends. It provides means to students for self-actualization and differentiation of right from wrong, ultimately pushing them to excel in their subjects and to acquire job for themselves.

Words of actual passage:	223
Required word count:	75
Word count of attempt:	82