Precis:

Beggary in India

In India beggary was quite common and foreigners called cities of "varanasi" as cities of beggars. Although there was no statistics available for estimating beggars but for reforms we did not need it. These are many causes of increased number of beggars. Like, the hospitability of Indians for beggars. Similarly beggars' faith to find people who gave them charity, is another cause of beggary. Similarly professional beggars who inherited beggary from ancestors is another reason. Also, that poverty, unemployment and growing population also become cause of beggary. And because of these reasons ignorant people were compelled to give charity to able beggars so that they can't prevent from the curse of beggars. Resultantly beggars become richer than patrons. In the west beggary is prohibited so India should also construct awareness among people against beggary. Similarly state should take strict measures against beggars. (142)
