

Economy or Politics: Pakistan's Conundrum

Outline:

1. Introduction

— Thesis Statement: Pakistan's economical and political situation, both are near the verge of collapse. To tackle both the problems at once is the need of time; but, priority wise, in the spite of institutions, politics is ranked at top.

2. What is a bigger problem for Pakistan, political instability or crashing economy?

3. What makes political institutions a top priority:

a. Good economy is affect of good politics.

b. Steady political institutions make steady fiscal policies.

c. Substantial politics incentivize fundings.

d. Secure government stimulate taxes.

e. Pakistan's federal and provincial assemblies under interim government.

4. Does economy need the attention first?

- a. Economical institutions can succeed independently.
- b. Valued rupee requires less efforts.
- c. Monetary programs function to safeguard economies.
- d. Taxes are gathered by strict policies.
- e. Interim government can tackle rupee devaluation.

5. Politics tops the pack of institutions:

- a. Economical institutions are shaped by political institutions.
- b. Stern policies stop the ~~money~~ currency devaluation.
- c. Approval of programs via solid political picture.
- d. Trustable government motivates the tax payers.
- e. Interim government's role is conduction of peaceful elections.

6. Conclusion.