Q03

Comprehension

Answer

A historian has to be cautious in writing a narrative because of a number of reasons. Foremost among them the fact of selectivity. Some events are significant, some are insignificant. Moreover, it is also difficult to differentiate the 'sideshow' and main event. So he has to remain cautious in writing a narrative.

Q. 02 :

History and memory are distinct from each other in many ways. The major difference between them is that memory is the personal recollections while history is an organised and evidence based presentation of the processes, actions and events that have occurred for a people over an extended period of time. Moreover, memory is the personal representations of individuals who lived through a series of events and processes while history is factual manifestation of the events.

Q. 03

Many historians differ from each other in recording an event because of a variety of lenses through which an event is viewed. For example, one historian may be primarily interested in the role that different views of social justice played in the actions of the participants. Another may be basically interested in the role that social networks played. Finally, a third may be especially interested in the role of charismatic personalities. These are different historians who record different events differently.

Q. 04

An inconsistent narrative is the narrative that is based upon ambiguous motives, simultaneous events and debatable causal connections among events. However, they are evenly supported by evidence.

Q. 05

The collective memory has an important role in bonding the people through collective representation. It gives a shared set of narratives and stories about the past events of the given group or community. For example, Welsh miners, Serbian villagers, or black Alabama possess a collective memory.

Question No. 07

(Translation)

It seems pleasant and cool to talk about unity. In hot fiercing sun, it gives a picture of that shady tree which will difficultly retain its shadow. By giving the sense of its presence, it will give anew determination to broken hopes. Dr Amjad Saavib is that shady tree which has taken the shape of 'Akwat' by full determination.

His purpose is bigger than his life because the purpose is long-lasting. This tree is always the source of fruits, flowers, fragrance and light.

This journey is unstoppable.
