Title: A Trip to an exotic Cherokee

The writer was confused about a tour destination as he wanted a cherishing and exotic place for holidays. The writer agreed to his the suggestion of his friend of a trip to Cherokee. There was a town named Qualla Boundary which presented a paradise image of Cherokee along with its old, rustic and impressive art and lifestyle. Then, they reached a shop that was filled with variety of cultural items. According to the writer, the shopkeeper explained that Cherokees not only depend on trade but they also try other means for ample returns. One such form of income was Bingo Weekend involving attractive games. Finally, the writer and his friend stopped at the museum showing a wide range of art. The writer, in fact, remembered the place and desired to visit the next exciting destination.
