

Economy or Politics: Pakistan's Conundrum

Outline:

1. Introduction

Theris Statement: Pakistan's economical and political situation, both are near the verge of collapse. Both the problems of once is the need of time; but, ^{or} priority wise, in the pite of institutions, politics is ranked at top.

2. What is the bigger problem for Pakistan: political instability or washing? economy?

3. What makes political institutions a top priority:

- a. Good economy is ~~the~~ ^{result} of good politics. generic
 - b. Steady political institutions make steady fiscal policies.
 - c. Substantial politics incentivize ^{foreign?} fundings.
 - d. ^{Stable?} Secure government stimulates ^{tax collection} tax collection.
 - e. Pakistan's federal and provincial assemblies under interim government. justify
- it narrows "politics" in topic*

4. Does economy need the attention first?

- Economical institutions can succeed independently.
- Valued rupee requires less efforts.
- Monetary programs function to safeguard economies.
- Taxes are gathered by strict policies.
- Interim government can tackle rupee devaluation.

5. Politics tops the pack of institutions:

- Economical institutions are shaped by political institutions.
- Stem policies stop the ~~money~~ currency devaluation.
- Approval of programs via solid political picture.
- Trustable government motivates the tax payers.
- Interim government's role is conduction of peaceful elections.

6. Conclusion.

topic is expository while treated as argumentative

lack of content