

A Trip to Cherokee

Last year writer had faced difficulty to choose a place for vacation. He wanted an exciting place for his holiday. His friend John suggested a trip to Cherokee, Oklahoma. They went off and visited a beautiful town called Qualla. Tourists flock to Qualla due to its beauty and culture. Language barrier was overcome by a native man so they did not stop easily. The man introduced himself as George. They were surprised by his fluent English. After chatting George invited them for lunch. George said to them he worked whole day during tour season. George said that during off-peak time tribal men use large bingo hall for different games to attract tourists. Writer's last destiny was a art museum. He missed that trip and plan another trip.
