Passage

It is in the temperate countries of northern Europe that the beneficial effects of cold are most manifest. A cold climate seems to stimulate energy by acting as an obstacle. In the face of an insuperable obstacle our energies are numbed by despair; the total absence of obstacles, on the other hand leaves no room for the exercise and training of energy; but a struggle against difficulties that we have a fair hope of over-coming, calls into active operation all our powers. In like manner, while intense cold numbs human energies, and a hot climate affords little motive for exertion, moderate cold seems to have a bracing effect on the human race. In a moderately cold climate man is engaged in an arduous, but no hopeless struggles and with the inclemency of the weather. He has to build strong houses and procure thick clothes to keep himself warm. To supply fuel for his fires, he must hew down trees and dig coal out of the earth. In the open air, unless he moves quickly, he will suffer pain from the biting wind. Finally, in order to replenish the expenditure of bodily tissue caused by his necessary exertions, he has to procure for himself plenty of nourishing food.

Quite different is the lot of man in the tropics. In the neighbourhood of the equator there is little need of clothes or fire, and it is possible with perfect comfort and no danger to health, to pass the livelong day stretched out on the bare ground beneath the shade of a tree. A very little fruit or vegetable food is required to sustain life under such circumstances, and that little can be obtained without much exertion from the bounteous earth.

We may recognize must the same difference between ourselves at different seasons of the year, as there is between human nature in the tropics and in temperate climes. In hot weather we are generally languid and inclined to take life easily; but when the cold season comes, we find that we are more inclined to vigorous exertion of our minds and bodies.

Seasons of the Man

Title: Seasonal Nature of a man.

The nature of man changes with the changing seasons. Extreme cold - like a hurdle that can't be overcome - makes him hopeless.

incorrect interpretation and sentence makes no sense

In hot weather, he doesn't need to be active as there are little to no hurdles. Only a moderately cold climate, like ~~that~~ in temperate countries, makes him use his abilities and practice his powers. He <sup>has to</sup> actively work to obtain shelter, warm clothes, wood and food.

↑ Tropical man lives a totally different life. He has little needs and can spend his days comfortably. He needs little food to survive, which he gets from generous earth.

Similar to the tropical and temperate man, our nature changes with seasons ~~change~~ throughout the year.

The city of Lahore is not only the center of politics but also an ancient cultural hub. The Mughals witnessed the zenith of their culture in the city. The city was also the center of Sikh Culture. This city also harboured the culture of knowledge and literature. It also remained the center of mystic people. The author of famous book on Sufism titled "Kashf al-Mahjub", Hazrat Ali Hijvari, famously known as Data Ganj Bakhsh, is also buried in the city. During the British Raj, the fashion of Lahore would get in vogue throughout the sub-continent. The importance of the city did not decrease even after the creation of Pakistan
