

Q. What is the role of culture in Socialization of an individual to become a useful member of a society? Discuss what cultural Patterns help to explain this phenomenon?

1) Introduction

Culture shapes how we think, what we value, and how we act. It is like an invisible frame that societies are built upon. Through cultural patterns, people learn the customs and rules of their society, preparing them to be effective members. This process called socialization, is crucial for our growth; cultural patterns are like threads weaving together beliefs and behaviors, helping us understand and navigate our world.

2) Role of Culture in Socialization

"Cultural socialization is an important socialization process that prepares youth for a racially/ethnically diverse and conscious society."

Hughes, et al., 2006

In society, the process of socialization is everywhere. All the time we learn how to behave, interact, and engage in certain activities. Culture is the most important of socialization and this process different primary and secondary agents help to transmit it and internalize it in children.

There are various ways in which culture plays a part in socialization. These ways are as follows:

2.1) Norms and values:

Inculcating culture establishes norms, which are shared expectations about appropriate behaviour. These norms teach individuals how to interact with others, resolve conflicts, and navigate social situations. For example, greeting gestures, table manners, interaction with others etc. Norms and rules vary across cultures but internalize into individuals what is an acceptable behaviour.

2.2) Language and Communication:

Language is a fundamental aspect of culture. It allows individuals to convey ideas, beliefs, and values. Through language, individuals learn not only how to express themselves, but also how to interpret and respond to the expressions of others. For example, the creation stories of various tribes not only explain the origin of the world but also convey important cultural values and beliefs about humanity's relationship with nature.

2.3) Culture shape social institutions:

Cultural patterns shape the design and functioning of social institutions.

like family, education, religion, and government. These institutions provide the structures and processes for socializing individuals into the norms and values of their society. For example, in South Korea, culture shape families according to Confucian values which emphasize respect for elders, filial piety, and strong family bonds. Other social institutions, such as Korean schools often promote Confucian values. So, the role of culture is socialization is of utmost importance as it establish the institutions which further act as socializing agents.

2.4) values and Beliefs:

Beliefs and values are most important aspects of cultures. Beliefs are ideas or convictions that people hold to be true, while values refer to judgement of what is good or bad and desirable or undesirable. For example, culture may internalize into Americans the belief of individualism and American Dream by highlighting the associated values with these beliefs.

2.5) cultural symbols and rituals:

Symbols and rituals convey deeper cultural meanings and serve as a way to pass down traditions and beliefs. Symbols are gestures and tangible objects which internalize into individuals about associated meaning. For example, in U.S.A. nodding head means yes and Shaking head back and forth means No, but the opposite is the case of Bulgaria where nodding means no and shaking head back and forth means yes. Similarly in Muslims the religious sign is crescent moon, but in Christianity it is cross. Rituals, such as religious ceremonies, national holidays, and rites of passage are powerful tools of socialization.

2.6) Cultural Sanctions and rewards:

Culture enforces behavioral standards through a system of rewards and sanctions. Positive behaviors are reinforced with praise, respect, or other forms of recognition, while deviance from cultural norms may lead to social disapproval or punishment.

2.7) Role Expectations:

Culture defines roles and expectations for individuals in society. This includes roles related to gender, age, and social status. Understanding and fulfilling these roles is a crucial aspect of becoming an effective member of society. For instance, in some cultures, young boys are taught early on how to become skilled herders, while girls are taught essential domestic skills.

3) Applying Sociological Perspective to understand how Culture helps Socialization

The Culture Transmission Theory, also known as Social Learning Theory, posits that individuals acquire ~~knowledge~~ their cultural knowledge, norms, and behaviours through observation, imitation, and reinforcement within their social environment. It highlights that culture is not innate but learned through interactions with significant figures; peers, and exposure to various forms of media. Through processes like observational learning and participation in cultural practices, individuals internalize the values and practices of their society, ultimately becoming effective members of their cultural community.

4) Cultural Patterns Explaining Socialization

4.1) Collectivism vs. Individualism:

The practice of collectivism and individualism are the best examples of how culture of different geographical areas plays a role in shaping the beliefs and values of the people.

a) Collectivism culture that emphasize collectivism. Place a strong emphasis on the community and group identity. Here, communal values, cooperation, and interdependence are highly valued. Socialization in collectivist culture is geared towards fostering a sense of belonging and shared responsibility.

U.K., Australia, Canada, which favour individualism exhibit cultural values that focus on Examples of collectivist countries: Japan, China, South Korea, Indonesia.

b) Individualism: In contrast, individualistic cultures place a greater emphasis on personal autonomy, self-expression, and individual achievement. Socialization in such cultures aims to cultivate a sense of independence and the pursuit of personal goal.

Examples of individualistic countries: U.K., U.S.A., Australia, Canada.

4.2) Masculinity vs. femininity

Cultures that emphasize masculinity tend to place a higher value on traits traditionally associated with masculinity, such as assertiveness, competition, and achievement. Socialization in these cultures aims to cultivate individuals who are driven to excel in their endeavors. In contrast, cultures emphasizing femininity, place a higher value on traits traditionally associated with femininity, such as nurturing, cooperation, and a focus on quality of life. Socialization in these cultures aims to cultivate individuals who value relationships and well-being.

4.3) High-context vs. Low-context communication in high-context cultures, much of the information is implicit and relies heavily on shared cultural knowledge, context, and nonverbal cues. These cultures often have a long-standing traditions and a deep history, which provide a rich context for communication. Countries who exercise collectivism ~~are~~ have high-context culture, such as China, Japan etc. In contrast, low-context cultures, communication is more explicit and relies less on shared cultural knowledge. These cultures tend to be more direct and rely on the explicit meaning of words and clear articulation of ideas. Countries who exercise individualism have low-context cultures, such as U.S.A., Canada, Germany, Scandinavia etc.

4.4) Power Distance: High Power Distance vs. Low-Power Distance: In cultures with high power distance, there is a strong emphasis on hierarchical relationships and a significant figures. These societies tend to accept and expect unequal distribution of power. Countries like Malaysia, Philippines, India, and many Middle Eastern countries tend to have high power distance orientations. In contrast, in countries with lower power distance, there is a preference for more egalitarian relationships and a reduced emphasis on hierarchical structures. These societies aim for a more equal distribution of Power, and decision-making. Countries like Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands, and New Zealand are often cited as examples of low Power distance cultures.

5) Conclusion

In conclusion, Cultural socialization plays an important role in making an individual an effective member of society. With the help of norms, values, language, and symbols people learn how to behave, talk, and participate when they are in public. Different cultural patterns, such as individualism, collectivism, feminism, masculinity etc are the beliefs which different people internalize with the help of culture.
