

Q No. 5 Make a Précis of the following passage and give it a suitable title:

(15)

There is immense and justified pride in what our colleges have done. At the same time, there is growing uneasiness about their product. The young boys and girls who carry away our degrees are very attractive lot—in looks, in bodily fitness, in kindliness, energy, courage and buoyancy. But what of their intellectual equipment? That too in some ways is admirable. Yet the uneasiness persists. When it becomes articulate, it takes the form of wishes that these attractive youngsters of ours had more intellectual depth and force, more of the firm clear, quiet thoughtfulness that is so potent and so needed a guard against besetting humbug and quackery. The complaints commonly are three. First granting that graduates know a great deal, their knowledge lives about in fragments and never gets welded together into the stuff of a tempered and mobile mind. Secondly, our university graduates have been so busy boring holes for themselves, acquiring special knowledge and skills that in later life they have little in common in the way of ideas, standards or principles. Thirdly it is alleged that past many decades have revealed a singular want of clarity about the great ends of living, attachment to which gives significance and direction to life.

Youngsters face frustration in self-development

There is significant and well-founded pride in the achievement of their colleague - in current times, discomfort is prevailing in youngsters when they complete their degrees. They are ^{being} more overwhelmed and enthusiasts. The mental abilities at high esteem but still some discomfort exist. At practical stage they are more deceptive because there is three main causes behind their behaviour. Firstly, they have shattered knowledge and face difficulties to unite. Secondly, they have theoretical knowledge and lack of practical skills. Thirdly, limited skill can create hurdles in self growth. However, youngsters needs more ~~clear~~ clarity and greatness to achieve high goals.
