John Locke's idea of Property

OR

John Locke's philosophy of Social Contract

John Locke argues that the purpose of society is to serve protect man's property. In this society, all laws and statutes serve common good, which is agreed upon by all members of that society. In order to maintain the status quo in society, these laws must be administered with impartiality. Moreover, man is an owner of his property. So, under the doctrine of 'No taxation without representation', man can't be taxed without his consent.
