Title: Poetry: A subjective view of Poets

The art has always been accused of disturbing harmony of one's moral life. Different poets hold unique and distinct view on poetry. Plato has defined art as a source of water that grows one's emotions. Likewise, Tolstoy defines it as a source of ~~water~~ infection, which suppresses other moments of art. Wordsworth defines poetry as emotions recollected in tranquillity, which means the present emotions only and not the past ones. However, the poetry of Shakespeare is void of aesthetics. He only depicts the true nature of art without exaggerations. The writer believes that whenever a poet represents passion in his art, he does not infect us with that emotion^{or passion}. In fact, one only looks through ~~at~~ the nature and essence of the art.
