

Green-life plays very pleasant role in the overall infrastructure of urban development. This includes family gatherings, leisure point for kids and even a space for extracurricular activities. Despite these, it also helps in improving overall air quality as well as acts as a fresh change aiding in mental well-being. However, maintaining this green-space amid urban development is truly a challenge. To overcome this, it is mandatory to create balance between the two enabling development and environmental well-being to run side by side.
