"Is idleness that bad"

All the wrongdoings in the world are the consequences of doers who are ignorant of the aptness of ~~their~~ ~~the~~ the time and place of their actions. The author believes that the devil is the busiest of all that breathes on this planet and in his realm, nobody is allowed to sit idle. The chaotic world that humans today inhabit is the result of the continuous pursuit of doing something. ~~and~~ and not because of the lack of the notion of doing nothing. For instance, if those who changed the course of world in 1914, had decided not to act and had stayed idle, the world would have been a better place. If lethargy ~~was~~ is denounced as a crime today, it would definitely benefit the human race.

Topic: A Trip to Cherokee

Precis

Choosing an uncommon and less crowded destination for holiday became a daunting task for the author however he was delighted when John suggested a trip to Cherokee, Oklahoma. By flight, they reached Qualla Boundary — a heaven on earth. The display of historical arts and the shows performed painted a clear picture of Cherokee's past. While skimming through the pieces in souvenir shops, they were welcomed by George, a middle-aged man surprisingly fluent in English, who then invited them over for lunch. Trade was not the only means of income, informed George, and that during off seasons the city usually resorted to other means such as gaming. Lastly, the author and his friend ^{went} visited to the ^{much cherished} museum in which depicted Cherokee's history. After the trip, the author was looking forward to have another trip.
