

A Trip to Cherokee

Choosing a tourist spot for vacation got difficult for the author because he wanted to visit less crowded area. John suggested him a trip to Cherokee and they flew to Qualla Boundary, a scenic town in Cherokee. The town presents an image of its history with its 18th century crafts, lifestyle and historical pageant. The natives helped them find a shop full of traditional souvenirs. A middle-age man named George welcomed them. While talking over lunch, George told them that the Cherokees got other means of income alongside trade. Bingo weekend is one such entertainment, attracting people towards betting games. Lastly they visited the Cherokee museum where handcrafted art was displayed. The author missed the place and would visit another one.
