Title: Absence of Nature in Greek

Art.

In earlier Greek arts, the way of perceiving nature was different. They did not portray the beauties of nature which they got in abundance, in their art. Earlier primitive people shown dislikeliness and fear for nature. For them, natural world was more dangerous for human like activities (and cause hinderance in agriculture). They found it as existential threat for wildlife animals and become more dangerous during natural calamities. For them, sea was a mere wasteland. Therefore, they manifest material goods preferably in their arts and poetry. However, after a great revolution occurred during the downfall of Republic and rise of Imperialism. It ^{turned} the world into a chaos and a wasteland. Hence, authors realized this fact and started to portray importance of nature in their works.
