Technology has significantly transformed education, making learning more accessible and collaborative. In the past, education was limited to a select few with access to scarce resources. Today, the internet offers vast amounts of information, allowing unprecedented access to education. Technology has also broken down the barriers of traditional classrooms, enabling students to collaborate and communicate globally. Furthermore, the role of teachers is evolving from the primary source of information to facilitators of learning, as students take greater responsibility for their own education using technology.
