

Title: freedom in education:
It's de-merits.

There are three schools of thought regarding freedom in education. The first favours complete freedom; second, absolute authority and third says there should be freedom but given that, children should act right. Author disagrees with third school of thought. ~~If~~^{If} children are free they will not act right. It holds that education have no positive purpose and only offers environment for growth, which undermines the importance of knowledge. Education must teach one necessary things which are pivotal to existence. Educators themselves need certain qualities which cannot result from impulse. Therefore, education must provide all the necessary qualities which children cannot get for themselves on their own.
